South Korean author Han Kang and British translator Deborah Smith shared the Man Booker International Prize for The Vegetarian, the first of Han's books to be published in English. Han has been described as writing "death-affirming" novels, unlike anything else that is.

"The White Book" by Han Kang

The White Book (Paperback) Han Kang's The Vegetarian - her mesmeric tale of authoritarian control and individual desire - claimed the Man Booker International Prize of and sealed her global recognition. Kang now returns with The White Book, a gossamer-delicate meditation on.

The weight of this guilt and a cyclical what-might-have-been reverie weighs heavily on these pages. There The White Book some nice passages, but also a whole lot of simple, simplistic, and "I don't get the point" kind of writing - writing for the sake of writing, or better said, I was reading it and not getting much out of it, despite wanting to. If you had lived beyond those first few hours, I would not be living. Touching story. This one is a very special to me.
